PR-Z 152- Bajo Guadalope Route

Cycling trail that stems from Caspe into the final landscapes that the Guadalope river crosses before diving into the Mequinenza reservoir. During its circular route, it partially overlaps with other major routes such as the Camino Natural del Ebro or the Camino Jacobeo. Some good patches of riparian forest and riparian undergrowth stand out, especially the view of the magnificent medieval bridge of Masatrigos, at the foot of a spectacular cliff.

The route starts in Caspe from the back of the Collegiate church and the Castle of el Compromiso, next to the parking lot in Calle Carmen with Ronda del Bailio. After descending the hill, it connects and overlaps with the Camino Natural del Ebro. At a turn to the right, you leave the GR 99 and head to cross the Guadalope over a bridge that gives access to the Palace of Rimer, which is flanked by an old watermill.

The path soon gives way to a track, leaves the Camino Jacobeo to the left, and the route heads to cross the road to Maella. On the other side, it ascends a gentle hill from where a new section of the path begins the descent through the interior of a ravine towards Masatrigos, connecting next to the bridge with the Miraflores-Zaragoceta route.

After leaving some farms behind, the PR-Z 152 leaves the farm track to take, to the right, a cattle path that descends by a watercourse and connects, at a bridge, with the service road next to an acequia which will continue to the left until it connects with a larger track in front of the weir.

After crossing the river over the bridge, the route continues to the right in the direction of Val de Zail following the track up to the road to Civan. It turns left and follows the asphalt for a few meters, until a path emerges to the right of the road heading to Caspe, where the route ends arriving by the path of the Capellán, under the Torre de Salamanca.

Continuing straight, you will find the old road bridge of el Vado. Next to it, the route leaves the track and continues along a cattle pass that crosses the hill, coinciding with the Camino Jacobeo.
