PR-Z 162 · Vales of the Matarraña Route

A cycling and hiking route located in Maella that caresses the southernmost county limits and combines pleasant fluvial landscapes with the secular dry lands of hills and valleys. The extensive stagnant sheet of water of Valcomuna halfway along the route does not fail to surprise the visitor because of the curious location of this reservoir, in a lateral valley away from the course of the river. Scattered along the way, are remains of trenches, a small crossing, and, above all, some monumental pines such as the Pí de Tudó, which stands out for its large size, capturing the attention of visitors.

The PR-Z 162 leaves by track in the area of the bridge, in front of the swimming pools, and goes up the right bank of the river. After passing some farms, the circular circuit begins and turns off to the left, towards the hill of the trenches through the mountain area. The bad path progresses through a hilly and rocky area to go down the mountain to a farm road. The route then progresses along a firm path through hills, valleys, and cultivated fields.

It continues progressing now to the left by farm tracks towards the monumental Pí del Tudó, which is a few meters to the right. Next to a farmhouse, turn right to look for the precarious path that descends to the Pino Chulero, located next to Mas del Campo.

The road runs through an area of olive groves and scrubland and passes by a small crossroads. Again the road becomes a path and a livestock trail through a rough area of scrubland to evolve into a trail and lead to a better track.

Turn right onto the main trail and go along the bank of the Valcomuna reservoir. By good track in a slight descending sense, and accompanied by the Camino Natural, the PR crosses the riverbank of the Matarraña between fields of fruit trees until the point where the loop began, ending again in Maella in a few minutes.
